LISTERS' CORNER

C. Eric Tull

In my last column I talked about the boundary between the provinces and the waters of the Northwest Territories. Terrestrial interprovincial and national borders usually give no problem, but what about marine boundaries between provinces; how do you tell when you cross them? In my experience most maps do not draw provincial boundaries at sea, although marine boundaries with the U.S.A. are usually shown.

When I am on a ferry between provinces or to the U.S., I time the ferry as it leaves harbour and when it reaches its destination. I then note the time for any birds that I might need for either region. If boundaries are shown on the map it is then a matter of checking the distances covered in each on a map, and dividing the time accordingly. When boundaries are not shown, I try to determine the point that is equidistant from the closest points in each area, and assume it represents the border.

Another point concerning borders is the 200 mile offshore limit that most nations, including Canada, claim. The American Birding Association defines their birding area as extending out 200 miles. However, what most people do not realize is that the 200 mile limit is actually 200 nautical miles, and that this translates into 230 land miles or 370 kilometers. One of the advantages of listing with Canadian Birding is that you are given an extra 30 miles of birding area -- if you can get out there.

In sending their lists to me, a few birders have included lists of other birders that they are aware of (other than family members). Unfortunately I cannot include them. First, I do not know if the birder has consented to see his/her list published, and we can only publish those who agree to be published. Second, some of the lists I have been sent are of birders who do not subscribe to Canadian Birding, and the lists we publish are restricted to willing subscribers.

This issue reports life lists for Canada, ATPAT, and the larger geographical areas. For each area, the numbers of lists over the thresholds have increased from the numbers published last year -- 53 vs 52 for world lists, 13 vs 5 for North and Middle America, 86 vs 76 for North America (the ABA area), 121 vs 113 for Canada, and 53 vs 49 for ATPAT. I have marked new lists reported for each area by a (+) symbol.

Martin Edwards has reduced Norm Chesterfield's world lead by 107 species, but Norm's lead is still such that at his current rate Martin will not catch him till the next millennium. (Speaking of which, are you all making plans to do a big millennium list?) The largest increases in world lists were 657 by Tom Murray, 621 by Tony Mason, 526 by Margaret Bain, and 409 by Hugh Currie.

Two Canadians, Steve Charlton and Bill Zufelt, have broken the 700 threshold for North America north of Mexico, and a total of 30 have broken the 600 threshold. The largest increases I saw were 57 by Gordon Tufts, 53 by Chris Escott, and 44 by Richard Klauke. Other increases that are particularly noticeable because of the level from which they started were 31 each by Steve Charlton (to 706) and John Olmsted (to 674), and 11 each by Mike Austin (to 754) and Bob Lewis (to 741). Adding 11 in a year at the 750 level is a remarkable achievement. Mike's Canadian list of 382 further indicates that he has not neglected Canada in building up his ABA list.

Of the lists reported this issue, Canada and North America have the highest cutoffs in terms of percentage, and the greatest numbers making the cutoffs. (Similar percentage cutoffs would have reduced the world and ATPAT lists to two or three birders each.) The Canadian lists remain much the same as a year ago: Norm Chesterfield, with a comfortable lead, is still the only one to break 500; most lists have increased by at most only a few species; and there has been only minor jockeying of positions among the top Canadian listers. The greatest increase was 29 by Tom Murray to 420.

By contrast, the ATPAT lists have shown some real increases -- 171 by Alex Gray, 155 by Harv Lane, and 140 by Blake Maybank. One of the joys of ATPAT listing is tackling a new province where every bird is new to the list. The potential for major spurts is always exciting until finally there are no new provinces or territories awaiting you. Blake's recent advances are now threatening Wayne Neily's hold on second place, and with the way he is travelling he may beat me to 3000.

Please note that we got the wrong address on the last reporting issue. Lists and comments should be sent to me at:
